

MORNING APPEAL.

Tuesday.....August 9, 1887.

FOUR JOHN SWINTON.

The demise of John Swinton's newspaper carries with it a lesson that almost anyone can read as he runs. Swinton has spent ten years of his life fighting the battles of the industrial classes. He fought with ability and courage, and the sturdy blows ever delivered in behalf labor in New York came from him. The laboring classes, however, paid very little attention to his efforts in their behalf, and let his paper die from lack of support.

There never has yet been a time when the laboring classes were willing to support a journal published exclusively in their behalf. They are fond of clamoring for high pay for everything they do, but when they have an editor working for them they pay him nothing and let him find himself.

They are willing to spend several millions a year in whiskey and tobacco, but begrudge any money for a paper fighting in their behalf, yet they growl and whine because the press is not continually advocating their interests. Papers, like everything else, are run to make money, and few men are such fools as to risk a fortune running a newspaper for the industrial classes. Experience has taught a good many publishers that the industrial classes will not run newspapers. They are anxious to have men jump into the world's ring and battle in their behalf, but he must do it all at his own expense.

The liquor seller and the tobacco man can always count on their support, but the advocate of their rights, never.

The laboring classes of the country by contributing 10 cents a week each, could have a paper as big and powerful as the Harper's Weekly, advocating their interests in trumpet tones; but they want no such paper if it costs 10 cents a week, for 10 cents will buy two glasses of beer in New York, and a paper of fine-cut; yet it took John Swinton, able man that he was, ten years to discover these truths, which almost everybody seems to recognize.

The English language, when used with skill, is very musical. We may cite as an example the words of Congressman Mills in a Texas speech. He remarked that "Hell is full of overflowing with such political preachers as Dr. Carrol, the Prohibitionist." In reply the editor of the Waco Advance referred to Mills in rhythmic phrase as "this foul-mouthed infidel snake-eyed monster." The people of Texas are gifted with great command of the vernacular.

Big Meadows ranchers are now harvesting the second alfalfa crop of this season. Several fields on the Meadows yielded from two to three tons to the acre at the first cutting, and will produce from one to two tons to the acre now. A third crop will be cut late in the Fall, which will make the total field per acre for the season from four to six tons.

Ten years ago last Spring Colonel Roundtree of Cave Creek, Ar., traded horses with a man in Phoenix, getting a two-year-old heifer for boot. Since then from that heifer he has sold $300 worth of beef and has forty-three of her offspring left. The old cow is still in good condition, and from all appearance is good for forty-three more.

Rumors are again revived that Mrs. Nellie Grant Sartoris is about to leave England and take up her abode permanently in New York. Algernon S. Sartoris, her husband, will not, it is said, accompany her, but will remain abroad to enjoy his clubs and his race very much in the same manner as has been his habit for several years.

It is hard for Americans to believe that after all the pomp and display of the Queen's jubilee, that agents of the Government were sent round from house to house, begging pence from the Queen. One Irish woman on being importuned said: "She's a widdle with a big family, hers too."

A lawyer who defended some Alsations of Turckheim against the charge of having sung the "Marseillaise," got three weeks imprisonment for his plea, the precise punishment that his clients received for their song.

The powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St. N. Y. Jy 30, 18
